Fraudsters are trying to get your personal information or money by pretending to represent Anglo American Platinum or parts of our business.

They fool people by running fake job adverts and making false job offers. Often, they also ask people for money to participate in recruitment processes.

You can catch them out and avoid falling for their tricks!

How to spot a job scam

- Is it asking for money? We never do this.
- Is it asking for personal information such as passport and bank account details before we have offered you a job and you have accepted it? We do not do this either.
- Does the email address follow this format: name.surname@angloamerican.com? All of our email addresses look like this. If it does not, the email is not from someone at Platinum.
- Are the documents poorly formatted? Do they contain spelling and grammatical errors? We communicate carefully and correctly.
- Is that an old logo? We apply our branding carefully and correctly
- Are you being asked to contact a cellphone? We use our office phones. They have landline numbers.
- Are you being guaranteed a job? We do not do that. We consider all the applications, then select the best applicants.
- Did you get a sudden offer? Were you approached although you had not applied for a job with us? We only offer jobs to people after going through a formal application and selection process. This involves approved e-mail and telephonic communication, as well as face-to-face interviews.
- Is the person insisting on urgency, right from the start? We always follow the right procedure, which takes time.
